Berrytime.com was founded in 2014 because we wanted to provide an affordable and a hassle-free online platform for everything health & wellness in Hong Kong.

The idea was to have the best products in the world on an easy-to-use and hassle-free platform.

The health & wellness industry is full of not-so-ethical marketing gimmicks and even pure frauds.

Berrytime is committed to ethical business practices and not using marketing gimmicks to boost our sales or profit margins.

WHAT DO WE MEAN BY ETHICAL BUSINESS PRACTICES?

Here are a few examples what happens in the health & wellness and the food industry, and what we are not supporting nor practicing.

- PETA revealed that bone char—often referred to as natural carbon—is widely used by the sugar industry as a decolorizing filter, which allows the sugar cane to achieve its desirable white color.
- Attorney General Eric T. Schneiderman conducted a scientific study, using DNA sequencing to test the ingredients in six types of herbal supplements, looking at different brands from multiple stores (total 78 different samples and 390 tests run in all). Shockingly, 79% of the supplements tested did not contain the primary ingredient listed on the label. Many of them contained other plant material, including plants that might cause an allergic reaction in unsuspecting customers. Contaminants included rice, alfalfa, wheat, daisy, pine, grass, citrus, cassava and houseplant DNA.
- Italian olive oil is seldom made of olives, which come from Spain, Morocco and Tunisia, and cut with soybean oil and other cheap oils from China. Obviously, Olive-Soybean oil doesn't really taste or look like real Italian extra virgin olive oil, but once some beta-carotene and chlorophyll are added, it is a whole another story - we have the (not so) extra virgin olive oil ready for you.
- Most BCAA (branched-chain amino acid) supplements are made from human hair and duck feather. While that is disgusting enough, the more disturbing fact is that the hair is often coming from either China or Brazil, and neither of the countries are particularly model students when it comes to human rights.
